Abstract	The presentation gives an overview of the statistical benefits of international collaboration in the field of cost-of-living adjustments to equalise the purchasing power of salaries around the world. It describes the work done under trilateral memorandum of understanding between the United Nations International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) Cost of Living Division, the International Service for Remuneration and Pensions of the Coordinated Organisations (ISRP) and the Eurostat Remuneration Statistics for Administrative Purposes Team. This collaboration has moved beyond a transactional project orientation with an initial focus on simple data exchange, into a transformational relationship with quality benefits mutually recognised by all participants.
